FIRE ON BOARD A STEAMER. AUCKLAND, 2nd November. At four o'clock on Sunday morning, when the steemer Wairarapus on route for Sydney, was near Gisborne, a fig was discovered on board. There were about a hundred passengers on A cry of fire was raised, and the officers harried to the passengers' cabins and awakened all hands. Upon being warned they rushed on deck in their night-dresses. By this time the cabin was full of smoke, and the noise of cracking timber could be heard Owing to the rapid progress of the fire several passengers narrowly escaped being suffocated. The fire spread to the ladies' cabin, and travelled aft the whole width of the ship, through into the hold and upper deck. Meantime the ship's head was turned towards Gisborne, and arrived off there at 6 o'clock, and boats were at once lowered. The passengers, wrapped in blankets in and other covering, were landed, and taken to the various hotels. Assistance was then sent to the vessel, and the fire was extinguished by 9 o'clock. It was thought at one time that the vessel would be lost. Inspection was afterwards made, when it was found that the whole of the middle of the vessel, about one-fourth of the length, was completely gutted. The first-class sleeping accommodation was destroyed and the dining saloon was greatly damaged by the water. A large amount of the cargo on board suffered severely," but the amount is not yet known. Many of the passengers lost all their effects. The estimated cost of refitting the vessel is £5,000. Admirable order and discipline was maintained The fire originated in the linen closet, and is supposed to have been caused by the carelessness of someone. When discovered the fire had gained a firm hold Amor of the vessel.

GOLD DISCOVERIES. SYDNEY, 27th October. A rich discovery of gold has been made at Filibuster Creek, five miles from Armidale. Several prospects have been obtained at a depth of 5it., giving over half-an-ounce of gold to the dish. A number of claims have been pogged out on the supposed course of the lead.

NORMARTON, 27th October. A rich gold reaf has been discovered at Croydon. Considerable excitement is taking place over the rush. It is one hundred and thirty miles hence, in the direction of the Etheridge Goldfield, twenty-five miles from Creen Creek Telegraph Station. A great number of miners are on the ground and they are increasing in numbers daily. Telegrams are being received from all quarters asking for information. Several good reef shows have been opened. No alluvial gold is yet reported. There is no water to be had. The nearest working gold is the Cumberland Reef on the Etheridge, one hundred and twenty miles away. Twelve tons of stone have | Manile ..... 29.98 ]

IMMEDIATE POSSESSION. Apply to 16. Bank Buildings, EXTRACT HIS SECOND WIFE.

[BY HIS FIRST MOTREE-IN-LAW.]

His Majosty, Satan, one morning awake, And found that his wife was dead ; He said to himself " This is really no joke, My household requires a head; The defunct, here below, was a marvel of worth; I must seek her successor above on the earth, She must be witty and nimble of tongue, Shrawd as the shrowdest of mon, A beauty, of course-with me that means young, Semowhere between twenty and ten; For I would be leved for myself alone,

And not for my dark Satshie throne! "But for more important than beauty or youth, Though, of course, I want those as well, Are the virtues of innocence, conder and truth; For though people speak evil of Hell, There are duties attached to its leading position,

And the wife of its Prince must dely all suspicion. So the Devil set forth on his conjugal quest Of a queen for the realms below, But he found that he lest his natural rest, And his progress was terribly slow For the woman he wanted was hard to find. And the cares of his kingdom weighed on his mind

The daughters of England were levely, he saw, A nation of fair-baired queezs; But those rosy lips could lay down the law, And they lived beyond his means. So he quietly wandered over to France, And there the Parisians led him a dance. He really thought for a while he had found The actual thing that he wanted, But before he had gone half the Faubourg around. The Devil began to be daunted.

"These ladies are quite beyond me, this is plain," He said to himself—and he left for Spain. But there, though the women were pretty and kind, Once more he was disappointed; They had hearts to be sure, but he wanted a mind: And their bair was too much anointed. So again His Majesty sallied forth And this time, he thought, he would visit the North But why should I toll of his lengthening work And of all the countries he tried?

Till be suddenly thought one fine day of New York - . . And instantly thitherward bied. But, quick as he was, the women were ready, Their heads were clear and their hearts were steady They took one look, and they looked him through, And they saw what he wanted at once: So innocence beamed from their orbs of blue And candor was queen for the nonce. Oh! you should have seen how their eyelids fell While they timidly asked for the news from Hell The Devil was flattered and flurried and-pleased,

What grace, what refinement, what sense! How quickly his notions, half-hinted, were seized, And nothing he said gave offence! He thought he had seen half these beauties before. The hatter he knew them he liked them the more. -But time was pressing, he could not wait, Though he scarcely knew how to choose, So he offered his crown and his royal state, Himself and his dead wife's shoes

To a damsel whose candor and virtues intact Were all that the Devil himself could exact. She accepted his offer, and did not repent When the day of her wedding drow nigh, For you know that to Hell there's an easy descent And-her friends would drop in by and by. While the Devil declared himself more and more bles As the innocent creature he tenderly pressed.

But when she was married and safely installed As Queen in the regions of shade t is said that the Devil was somewhat appalled At the bargain he found he had made. And remarked, "'Twould have been, on the who quite as well

Hupson, in Gentleman's Macolonist has established his position so that gazine. he cannot be driven out. Twenty-five years ago it was still possible for a great cacique to gallop into the town, clattering his silver annual tribute of cattle, knife-blades, indigo, to the rector of the parish, and had been over the sand and gravel strata; this soil was a greyhound, to the use of both of which the perennial giant pampas grasses; but when to go hawking. On arrival at the parsonage, of domestic animals this native vegetation to let the rector know of his arrival. The growing perishable clovers and grasses of a peck of oats for the horse, and a loaf for audacious robbers bount the riverside; but blew three blasts on his born. . the contest. During this war the Imperialists HE conceived the idea of capturing the Patagonian settlement of El Carmen, which was known to be quite unprotected. Three ships | 5 11 of war with a large contingent of soldiers were sent out to effect this insignificant conquest, and in due time reached the Rio Negro. One of the ships came to grief on the bar, which is very difficult; and there it eventually became a total wreck. The other two succeeded in getting safely into the river. The troops, to the number of 500 men, were disembarked and sent on to capture the town, which is twenty, miles distant, from the sea. The ships at the same time proceeded up the river, though it was scarcely thought that their co-operation would be required to take so MONOPOLE RED SEAL (medium dry). weak a place as the Carmen. Happily for the colonists, the Imperial armada found the navigation difficult, and one of the chips ran on to a sandbank about half way to the town: the other proceeded alone, only to arrive when it was all over with the land force. Tidings of the approaching army soon reached the Carmen, and all able-bodied men within call were quickly mustered in the fort. They numbered only seventy, tut the Patagonians were determined to defend themselves. Women and children were brought into the fort; guns were loaded and placed in position; then the commander had a happy juspiration and all the strong women were made to display thomselves on the walls in male attire. Dummy soldiers, hastily improvised from blocks of wood, bolsters, and other materials, were also placed at intervals; so that when the Brazilians arrived in eight they were surprised to see four or five hundred men, as they thought, on the ramparts before them. The day had been oppressively hot, without a cloud, and that march of about thirty miles over the waterless desert had exhausted the men. To the joy and amazement of the Patagonians, their formidable enemy left without firing a shot. Another happy inspiration came to the aid of the commander, and as soon as the Brazilians had disappeared behind the rising ground, his seventy men were hastily despatched to collect and bring in all the horses pasturing in the valley. When the invaders had been about three or four hours on their spiritless return march the thunder of innumerable hoofs was bear behind them, and looking back, they beheld a great army, as they imagined in their terror. charging down upon them. These were their seventy foes spread in an immense halfmoon, in the hollow of which over a thousand horses were being driven along at frantic speed. The Brazilians received their equine | THE TABLE of ARRIVALS and DEPAR enemy with a discharge of musketry; but though many horses were slain or wounded. the frantic vells of the drivers behind still urged them on, and in a few moments, blind with panic, they were trampling down the invaders. In the meantime the Patagonians were firing into the confused mass of horses and men; and by a singular chance—a miracle it was held to be at the time-the officer commanding the Imperial troops was shot dead by a stray bullet; then the men threw down their arms and surrendered at discretion -500 disciplined soldiers of the Empire to seventy poor Patagonians, mostly farmers, tradesmen, and artisans. The honour of the Empire was very little to those famishing wretches crying out with frothing mouths for water instead of quarter. Leaving their muskets scattered about the plain, they were marched by their captors down to the river which was about four miles off, and reached it at a point just where the bank slopes down between the Parrot's Cliff on one side and the house I resided in on the other. Like a herd of cattle maddened with thirst, they rushed into the water, trampling each other down in their baste, so that many were smothered, while others, pushed too far out by the surging mass behind, were swept from their feet by the swift current and drowned, When they had drunk their fill, they were ancient fascination for me I found a world driven like cattle to the Carmen and shut up large enough for my sympathies in the little within the fort. In the evening the ship community of men and women on the Rio arrived before the town, and, going a little of HAS. HEIDSIECK'S Negro.
